

Charle Charlain, a well-dressed individual, was waiting at a bus stop for a bus named Tandra when an angry person approached. This person, identified as Badri, began scolding everyone around him by saying Blady system , including Charle, for no apparent reason.

Charle calmly responded, "Please, speak nicely."

Badri retorted, "Who are you to tell me what to do, you bruster?"

Shortly after this exchange, Badri was hit by a small bike, resulting in injuries. He returned home, but the next day, Charle confronted him and fatally cut his neck. Badri died within 10 minutes, and Charle then jumped out of the window, landing on the street below. When Badri's wife saw Charle's actions, she was shocked and fell to the ground. The police were called, and they deemed the incident a brutal killing. After the murder He left the knife

Days before, it was revealed that Charle was a scientist conducting experiments on animals. He had developed a drug that could potentially enhance human abilities but also had lethal effects. A fellow scientist stole the drug and burned down Charle's lab, resulting in both their deaths. Over the following three years, those who had escaped the fire began dying one after another, leading to a special police investigation.

Ravi, a police officer who had never used a gun due to his fear, was assigned to the case. He was leg wounded recently due to an accident

News article :

The case of the most wanted scientist has been assigned to the Leg Wound Police. Will he be able to solve it?

Raju, a college student from Mumbai studying undergraduate B-Tech CSE, ventured into entrepreneurship by creating the website Vceece, which provided textbooks and lectures. His passion for web development led him to expand into creating a website dedicated to facts. Despite his father's concerns about his research, Raju promised not to delve into the case. However, over five years, he secretly investigated the mysterious deaths following the laboratory accident.

A bigshot who had escaped the accident eventually met his demise, seemingly ending the mystery. However, when the health minister died under similar circumstances, the city was put on red alert, with Law 141 enforced (granting police the authority to shoot on sight after 6 PM). Raju, along with his friend Keerthi and a camera, ventured out to investigate. They witnessed gorilla attacks that decimated the police force.

Raju collected forensic reports showing the absence of footprints at the attack sites, linking all victims to the laboratory accident. Shockingly, Raju's father, who worked as a watchman at the lab, had stolen drugs for badri scientist , implicating him in the killings.

In his final moments, Raju's father confessed to his actions, prompting Raju and Keerthi to rush to his side. They were shot by the assailant but survived, with Raju waking from a coma after ten days.

Resuming his investigation, Raju reviewed camera footage, identifying the assailant as a Christian. Suspecting revenge from Charle, he traced the call records of the initial victim, Badri, and later, Police Officer Ravi, revealing their connection.

Confronting Ravi, Raju found himself low by the officer's newfound superhuman strength. Keerthi intervened, shooting Ravi and saving Raju. With evidence in hand, Raju overdosed the superhuman drug to Ravi, ultimately defeating him and bringing justice to the victims.
